If God speaks to us from the Bible, how is it that we are not more excited by that? Does every part of the Bible say more or less the same thing or are there things we are missing? Are there right and wrong ways of handling God's word?

Over the past thirteen years at our Cornhill summer school, we have been looking at these kinds of questions and giving people a taster of what the Cornhill training course is all about, but not everyone can manage to make themselves available for a week in June and so we are running four evening classes, looking at some of the basic tools, which enable us to understand the Bible and apply it appropriately to our lives and the lives of others. This should be of help for people in their personal study of God's word, but also as they teach God's word to others, in small group settings, to children, teenagers or adults. Moore Casement, who runs Cornhill Belfast, will be leading these evenings, which are open to anyone from student age upwards.
